PREFACE

The object of the present work is to render easy of access such general information with regard to the different Masonic bodies as should be interesting to craftsmen in general, but which, as a rule, is very difficult to obtain.

It is hoped that by placing under one cover information with regard to the standing and progress of each Masonic order, the work of comparison will be made easier, interest increased, and a stimulus given leading to increased activity in the different bodies.

With regard to the introductory articles which appear throughout the book, the authorities chiefly followed have been, for articles on Craft Masonry and the Royal and Select Masters, the standard works of Mackey and Macoy, and for the article on the Knights Templar, Addison's invaluable History of that order.

With regard to the development of the above named orders in Canada, the facts have been mainly obtained from M. W. Bro. John Ross Robertson's History of Freemasonry in Canada, and his History of the Canadian Knights Templar and of the Cryptic Rite.

In future editions of this Annual it is intended that the Grand Lodges and Chapters of the other Canadian Provinces shall be included.

Grand Lodges of Ancient Craft Masonry

NCIENT Craft Masonry is too large a subject to be satisfactorily treated in the short space allotted to the present article. With the brief statement that modern Masonry should be regarded as the legitimate successor of the ancient mysteries of Greece and Egypt, we will pass on to deal more particularly with the subject of Grand Lodges. These latter institutions we may here remark, are of comparatively recent origin in the Masonic system. Before the time of Grand bodies, each individual lodge exercised all the powers and privileges now appertaining to a Grand Lodge. The earliest lodges, however, were not the warranted and chartered bodies that they have since become. Any assembly of seven or more Masons, wherever meeting, might form a lodge and initiate members, so that before Grand Lodges there were Lodges and before Lodges there were individual Masons. The first mention we have of Grand Lodge has reference to the Grand Assembly, held at York in 926, A. D., when Prince Edwin, brother of King Athelstane, was elected Grand Master. From this time on Grand Lodges were frequently held; though they differed essentially from the Grand bodies of the present day, in as much as they were not attended by regularly elected representatives but were general assemblies which any Mason might attend, and in whose proceedings he had a voice. After 1567 the Masons of the south of England separated from their brethren of the north, and from this time on there were two General Assemblies and two Grand Masters in England.

In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, chiefly on account of political troubles and latterly also on account of the infirmity of the Grand Master, Sir Christopher Wren, Masonry, especially in the south of England, materially declined, until, on the death of the Grand Master, there were only four lodges in the southern jurisdiction, all located in London. In 1715 these four lodges assembled in the Apple-Tree Tavern, in an attempt to give a new impetus to Masonry. They placed the oldest Master Mason in the Chair, and constituted themselves a Grand Lodge. They then resolved to hold an annual assembly and a feast, and to elect a Grand Master from among their own number. On the occasion of the annual assembly and feast of 1717, Mr. Anthony Sayer was elected Grand Master. It was by a resolution of this assembly that the right of individual Masons to assemble in lodges to confer degrees, wherever a sufficient number were gathered together, was first curtailed, and it was provided that these meetings should be held only in certain places. All these lodges, except the four originally formed, were to be regularly warranted by the Grand Master and their warrants confirmed by the Grand Lodge.

While these proceedings were going on in the south of England, the Masons in the north still maintained a separate organization, and their Grand Lodge regularly convened at York. Until 1725 the two Grand Lodges of York and London worked together in harmony. In this year the Grand Lodge of London invaded the territory of the Grand Lodge at York, by granting a warrant to seceding masons from the latter body. This was resented by the York body and friendly relations were suspended. In 1739 the northern Masons and seceding Masons from the south established a Grand Lodge, having its seat at London, in opposition to the grand body already established there; this they called the "Grand Lodge of Ancient York Masons," dubbing the London body and its adherents "Modern Masons." These two bodies worked in opposition to one another until the year 1813, when they were united under the Grand Mastership of H.R.H. The Duke of Sussex. They have been since known as the United Grand Lodge of England and Wales, and are the parent body of most of the Grand Lodges now in existence.

Freemasonry was introduced into Scotland by the architects who were engaged in building the Abbey of Kilwinning. Before 1736 the head of the St. Clair family was hereditary Grand Master. In that year the Grand Lodge of Scotland was first formed, the hereditary Grand Master resigning his position and becoming the first elective Grand Master.

The Grand Lodge of Ireland was formed in 1729 at a convention of the Freemasons of Ireland, held in Dublin, when the Earl of Kingston was elected first Grand Master.

The first lodge regularly formed in what is now included under the term "Canada" was at Annapolis Royal, in Acadia, sometime before 1749. This lodge was formed under a Boston warrant, as also was the second lodge which was formed at Halifax or Chebucto, as it was then called, in 1749. Other lodges in Acadia were subsequently formed by the same authority.

The first Masonic meeting ever held in old Canada was in Quebec city in 1759, when the Masters and Wardens of the military lodges stationed there assembled to elect a Provincial Grand Master for Quebec. The first lodge regularly formed in Lower Canada was known as the "Select Lodge" in Quebec city. The exact date of its formation we do not know, but it was probably in 1759. In the same year the Merchants' Lodge of Quebec was organized, under dispensation, receiving a regular warrant from the Grand Lodge at London in 1762. The Provincial Grand Lodge of Lower Canada was established some time prior to 1767. The first Provincial Grand Master of Lower Canada was Bro. Lieut. Guinnett, elected in 1759.

In Upper Canada the first lodge established was St. John's, No. 19, at Niagara, which was organized in 1787 under a warrant from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Quebec. The first Provincial Grand Lodge for Upper Canada was established in 1792 at Niagara. R.W. Bro. William Jarvis being appointed first Provincial Grand Master by the Grand Lodge (Ancients) of London. In 1802 Bro. Jarvis moved the seat of the Grand Lodge from Niagara to York (Toronto). This action was resented by many of the brethren, who seceded and formed a schismatic Grand Lodge at Niagara, under the grand mastership of R.W. Bro. Robert Kerr. This grand body proved itself very active, and is the parent of many of the oldest and best lodges now under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Canada. The two Upper Canadian bodies continued to work in opposition to each other until their amalgamation in 1822.

In 1855 a movement was started to secure an independent Grand Lodge for Canada. A convention of many Canadian lodges was in that year held in Hamilton, and the Grand Lodge of Canada was formed, with William Mercer Wilson, Worshipful Master of Norfolk Lodge, Simcoe, as the first Grand Master. Norfolk Lodge, No. 500, Simcoe, was the first lodge to withdraw its allegiance from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Upper Canada and to declare its adherence to the new Grand Lodge of Canada. This latter body had then jurisdiction over what was before 1867 known as Canada, namely, the two modern Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

In 1869 the lodges in Quebec Province withdrew their allegiance from the Grand Lodge of Canada and formed an independent Grand Lodge of Quebec, the parent body retaining its former style. So it is that we have a Grand Lodge of Canada, which has jurisdiction in the Province of Ontario only.

In addition to the Grand Lodges in Ontario and Quebec, there are five other grand bodies in Canada, each province having its own Grand Lodge. These were formed mainly by secession from the Grand Lodge of England. The names of the different Grand Lodges in Canada, together with the dates of their formation are as follows : Canada (Ontario), October 10th, 1855 ; Quebec, October 20th, 1867 ; New Brunswick, October 9th, 1867 ; Nova Scotia, February 20th, 1866 ; Prince Edward Island, June 20th, 1875 ; Manitoba, May 12th, 1875 ; British Columbia, December 26th, 1871.

In all Canada there are, according to the latest returns, 660 lodges, with a total membership of 48,953, being a net increase in membership of 3,214 during the last year.

Royal Arch Masonry

F the origin of the Royal Arch degree little can be definitely said. It most probably developed in England, possibly during the seventeenth century, in an attempt to supplement what appeared to be the missing portions of the Master Mason's degree. It was at first hardly regarded as a separate grade, but rather as an appendix or supplement to the degree of Master Mason. Certain it is that before 1797 the Royal Arch degree was under the jurisdiction of Grand Lodges and was always conferred by a competent number of companions in a Blue Lodge, under a Master's warrant. In this respect it was in very nearly the same position that the official degree of Past Master now is in symbolic lodges in England and Canada. The first step leading toward the separation of the Royal Arch from the symbolic degrees was taken in 1797, when a convention of representatives of the Royal Arch Masons of Pennsylvania was held in Philadelphia and a Grand Chapter was formed, which took unto itself jurisdiction over the Royal Arch degree. Other degrees were then developed as necessary antecedants to the Royal Arch. Of these the Mark Master's degree arose in England, while the Most Excellent Master's is of purely American origin. In England two only of our capitular degrees are practised, the Mark Master's and the Royal Arch; but these are under separate jurisdictions, and the only qualification necessary in a candidate for either degree is the possession of the three craft degrees. In the United States four capitular degrees are worked, viz.:—Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and the Royal Arch. In Canada the Past Master's degree is reserved for actually installed masters of symbolic lodges and is never conferred in a Chapter. The Most Excellent Master's degree is, however, retained.

After the formation of the Grand Chapter of Pennsylvania other Grand Chapters were formed, embracing, in time, all the different states and territories. The Grand Chapter of Canada was formed in 1856. In 1870 the Royal Arch Masons of Nova Scotia seceded and formed the Grand Chapter of Nova Scotia. In 1877 the Grand Chapter of Quebec, and in 1888 the Grand Chapter of New Brunswick, were formed by secession from the Grand Chapter of Canada, the parent body, however, retaining its former style.

Some ritualistic differences exist between the Chapters working under the grand bodies of Canada and Quebec on the one hand, and those working under the grand bodies of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia on the other. The former grand bodies have followed the English work, except as regards the Most Excellent Master's degree, while the latter have adopted the American ritual.

To sum up: Royal Arch Masons meet in bodies called Chapters in which in Canada, except in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, three degrees are worked, these being: Mark Master, Most Excellent Master, and Royal Arch Mason. The officers are: First Principal Zerubbabel, Second Principal Haggai, Third Principal Joshua, Scribe Ezra and Scribe Nehemiah, Principal Sojourner, Senior Sojourner and Junior Sojourner, and the Janitor. In New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, where the American work is followed, there are four degrees, viz.: Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and Royal Arch Mason, while the officers are: High Priest, King, Scribe, Captain of the Host, Principal Sojourner, Royal Arch Captain, the Grand Masters of the Veils, Secretary, Treasurer and Sentinel.

A Chapter, however, is only styled such when opened in the Royal Arch degree; when opened in the lower degrees, it is styled a lodge and the officers assume different appellations. It is more correct to say that to each Chapter of Royal Arch Masons there is attached a lodge of Mark and another of Most Excellent Masters, all being under the jurisdiction of the Grand Chapter.

The government of these different bodies is vested in a body styled the Grand Chapter, which holds annual meetings at places which may be determined upon at each preceding session. The members of a Grand Chapter are in Canada and Quebec: (a) all Past First Principals, (b) the three Principals of each Chapter; in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, (a) Past High Priests, (b) the High Priest, King, and Scribe of each Chapter. In Canada there are four Grand Chapters, viz.: Canada (having jurisdiction west of Quebec Province), Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

A candidate for the capitular degrees must be a Master Mason in good standing and must have received the degree at least three months before receiving the Royal Arch, though there are no time limitations for receiving the degrees of Mark and Most Excellent Master. In Quebec no companion can be installed First Principal of a Chapter who has not served as Master of a symbolic lodge. The fees for the capitular degrees range from ten to twenty dollars.

In Canada, according to the reports for the present year, there are 142 Chapters and 9,572 Royal Arch Masons in good standing, being a net increase over the previous year of 844. In the United States the present membership is 237,425, the net increase over last year being 14,744.

The Grand Chapter OF Royal Arch Masons of Canada

ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS

IN addition to the three symbolic degrees, three other Masonic organizations have acquired such a wide popularity and are so extensively cultivated in the United States, that they, in conjunction with the Craft degrees, are sometimes described as the American Rite. These three are: the Royal Arch (already treated), the Royal and Select Masters, and the Knights Templar. The system of the Royal and Select Masters, or Cryptic Masonry, as it is sometimes called, is independent of all other organizations, though its membership is limited to Royal Arch Masons in good standing. The relation between Grand Council and Subordinate Council is the same as that existing between a Grand Lodge of Craft Masonry and any subordinate lodge. The Cryptic degrees are intimately connected with the Royal Arch, which they should logically precede.

As is the case with the vast majority of Masonic degrees, nothing definite is known as to the origin and development of this system. We sometimes speak of ancient degrees and of modern degrees, but, with few exceptions, every Masonic grade may be described as ancient. Nearly every degree has an authentic history of between one hundred and fifty and two hundred years, further back than that little definite information can be obtained of any of them, what knowledge we have with regard to Masonry antedating that period, generally has reference to the fraternity as a whole, without regard to any division into degrees. The Master Mason's degree and the Fellow Craft degree, as degrees, are probably little older than the Rose Croix and not much older than the Royal Arch or the Royal Order of Scotland. So the assertion that the three Craft degrees are ancient and the higher degrees modern is one that can scarcely be supported by historical evidence. Ancient references to Entered Apprentice, Fellow of Craft and Master Mason have no allusion to degrees of a secret society, but to rank in a builder's guild or union, and mean no more than the terms: Apprentice, Skilled Workman, and Master.

Builder do with us. Some Masonic degrees we know to be modern fabrications, and these are, generally speaking, those practised exclusively or mainly in the United States. The youngest of the others, however, is of an antiquity great enough to command respect, and too great to admit of definite proof that there are others older.

During the eighteenth century system after system of Masonic degrees originated in Europe, resembling each other only in the fact that the first three degrees in each were entitled respectively—Apprentice, Fellow and Master, these, of course, being allegorical adaptions of similar terms employed in the trade-guilds of the time. The number of these degrees was enormous, upwards of eight hundred having been at some time or other actively practised. About the middle of the century many of these degrees became classified and arranged in a definite system, which, after some additions, became known as the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. Scottish Rite Masonry cannot acknowledge as regular and Masonic any degree beyond that of Inspector-General, the thirty-third and last. Many degrees, however, not included in the regular system, were still practised, not as regular, but as side-degrees, and in time the Inspectors-General of the thirty-third degree assumed as a personal prerogative, the conferring of these side-degrees upon qualified members of the Rite. Amongst these side-degrees were the three we are now considering : the Royal Master's, the Select Master's and the Super-Excellent Master's. In 1810 the Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree chartered, in the city of Charleston, a special council for the working of these three degrees, not, however, as an independent body, but as an adjunct or attached body to the Charleston Council of Princes of Jerusalem (sixteenth degree). Its appellation was the Columbian Grand Council, and a pledge of allegiance to the Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree was exacted from all admitted to its membership. Other councils were established throughout the United States under the same authority. In 1854, however, a movement in favor of independence arose, and the councils of these degrees threw off their allegiance to the Supreme Council, and organized themselves into an independent body in Masonry, governed by elective Grand Councils and forming an organization similar to that of the Royal Arch and the Knights Templar. The conferring of these degrees, however, it is said, is still claimed, at least in the Southern jurisdiction of the United States, as a personal prerogative of the Inspectors-General of the Scottish Rite, and some authorities contend that the degrees so conferred would be as valid as if actually bestowed in a regularly chartered Council.

The first Canadian Council of Royal and Select Masters was established in St. John, N.B., in 1867, under charter from the Grand Council of Maine. Later in the same year the Grand Council of New Brunswick was formed, from which sprang the Grand Council of Canada having jurisdiction west of the Maritime provinces.

This beautiful Rite is very popular in the United States, where it has a large membership. In Canada, however, it is to-day almost dormant. Little information can be obtained as to its present condition. For some years past, owing to lack of funds, the proceedings of the Grand Council have not been published, consequently, we have not, in this edition of the Annual, published statistical and other information with regard to the order in Canada. Cryptic Masonry, however, is so popular in the United States and so frequently mentioned in Masonic publications, that some information with regard to it might not be unwelcome to Canadian Craftsmen. - We have here given it the place which is usually assigned it in the American system, intermediate between the Royal Arch and the Templar Order.

THE KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

HE Order of the Knights Templar and Knights of Malta constitutes an independent Masonic organization flourishing principally in the British Dominions, and in the United States, and claiming to be lineally descended from the two most famous chivalric orders of the middle ages. The order of the Temple, however as at present established in Great Britain, presents marked points of contrast to the Knights Templar of the United States. In the former country the traditions of the Ancient Order have been closely followed, and the ceremonies as practised now approximate as closely as possible to those of mediaeval times. In the United States, on the other hand, the Templar Order is a modern institution; its ceremonies are intended rather to impress a non-critical but sensation-loving populace, than to perpetuate ancient and time-honored observances. The British Order does not claim to be a Masonic body, but an independent order of chivalry voluntarily choosing its initiates from amongst members of the Masonic fraternity; it is allied to Masonry, but not in the slightest degree a part of the Masonic system. The American Templar order does not retain this independent character, but practically acknowledges itself to be a Masonic order, as much so as the Royal Arch or the Royal and Select Masters; it has become merely an appendant branch of the American Masonic system. The ceremonies of the British order possess historical significance, which the American ceremonies by comparison lack.

Again, as to popularity, there is a wide difference between the two bodies. It is quite possible that the vast majority of the British people are altogether ignorant of the very existence of this ancient and honorable order, of which the present Monarch has been Grand Master, and her late Majesty the Patron. In the United States, on the other hand, what child has not heard of the Knights Templar, with their imposing parades, their gorgeous uniforms, their brass bands and magnificent display? Perhaps as a necessary consequence of this the British order has a small but select membership, while the Templar body in the United States has a membership exceeding many times in numbers that of all other countries combined. At present it boasts over 100,000; but is its value not rather depreciated thereby?

In the British Dominions the governing bodies of the Knights Templar are called Sovereign Great Priories, and the subordinate bodies, Preceptories. Some years ago an attempt was made to follow the practice of the ancient Knights in having but one supreme governing body. This was known as Convent-General, with the Prince of Wales (now Edward VII) as its head, and having jurisdiction over the order throughout the Empire. The plan however, did not prove successful and after some years Convent-General was abolished, and the different Great Priories resumed their independence. In the United States, the subordinate bodies of the order are styled Commanderies; to each state there is a Grand Commandery while the governing body of the order for the entire union is called the Grand Encampment. In Great Britain, two orders of chivalry are conferred, the Knight Templar and the Knight of Malta, in the United States three quasi-Masonic degrees are worked: the Red Cross, the Knight Temp'ar and the Knight of Malta. In Canada, though the English ritual is very closely followed, nevertheless, the American system of working three degrees has been adopted. The qualifications for membership are the possession of the Royal Arch degree and a declaration of belief in the Holy and undivided Trinity. The officers of a subordinate preceptory are: Presiding Preceptor, Constable, Marshall, Registrar, Chaplain, Treasurer, Captain of the Guard, Director of Ceremonies, First Standard-Bearer, Second Standard-Bearer, Sword-Bearer and Guard. The presiding officer of the Sovereign Great Priory is styled Supreme Grand Master, and in Canada the entire jurisdiction is divided for purposes of inspection, into districts, over each of which is placed an officer styled Provincial Prior corresponding to the District Deputy Grand Master in Craft Masonry.

The mediæval order of the Temple originated in the time of the Crusades, when Europe in fanatic zeal hurled herself like a thunderbolt upon Asia. To the cultured scepticism of Greece, and the religious indifference of the early Roman Empire had succeeded what was pre-eminently an age of Faith ; and instead of delving into the arcana of Nature or attempting to form philosophical and ethical systems the men of the middle ages became chiefly concerned with the future welfare of their own souls. Of all the means of grace none was reputed of greater efficacy than pilgrimages to places rendered hallowed by Scripture narrative or religious tradition; and to visit the scenes of our Saviour's life and passion became the dream of every pious heart ; those who had successfully achieved such pilgrimage became for the remainder of their lives objects of peculiar regard and veneration. Many, however, were the difficulties to be overcome and the dangers to be faced before the feet of the pilgrim might tread the hallowed soil of Palestine or his eyes rest upon the blessed walls of Jerusaleim. The Holy Places were in the possession of the Infidel, whose delight it was to levy ruinous impost and subject to insult and maltreatment the pious Christians who passed that way. The story of the propaganda conducted by Peter the Hermit and Walter the Penniless is known to every schoolboy ; how their fiery preaching roused all Europe to safeguard the pilgrim's path and chastise the audacious insolence of the followers of Mahammed. At length after many years of warfare the main object of the crusades seemed attained, when in 1099 A.D., Godfrey of Bouillon founded his kingdom of Jerusaleim. But in spite of this accomplishment the difficulties of pilgrimage seemed if anything enhanced. The lofty mountains between Jerusaleim and the coast were infested by bands of Bedouins, who rendered traveling of any kind extremely hazardous and whose special prey was the pilgrims, who were now flocking in ever-increasing numbers from Europe to the Holy Land. Fired by religious enthusiasm nine knights, who had already won glory and honor in warfare with the Infidel, formed themselves into a semi-religious, semi-military association with the object of clearing the mountains of the robbers, and of protecting pilgrims on their way to the Holy City. In 1113, in the Holy Church of the Resurrection at Jerusalem, their association was finally organized ; the appellation adopted was that of " Poor Fellow Soldiers of Jesus Christ " and vows of perpetual chastity, obedience and poverty were assumed. The names of these knights were held subsequently in such high honor by the Templars that we here give them in full. They were :—

1. Hugh de Payens ; 2. Geoffrey de St. Aldemar ; 3. Rolal ;
4. Gondemar ; 5. Godfrey Bisol ; 6. Payens de Montidier ;
7. Archibald de St. Amon ; 8. Andrew de Montbar ; 9. The Count de Provence. Hugh de Payens was chosen as their first Grand Master, and in 1128 a system of regulations was drawn up for them by the Pope, and they then added to their former objects that of defending the kingdom of Jerusalem and the whole Eastern church from the attacks of the Infidels.

On the summit of the Holy Mount Moriah the site of the ancient Temple was occupied by a series of structures, mainly the erection of the Mahomedans, and vulgarly supposed to be the Temple of Solomon itself. Amongst these structures was an ancient church erected in 540 A.D., by the Emperor Justinian. This church was in 1118 assigned by King Baldwin II. of Jerusualem to the Templars as their local habitation, from which circumstances they became known as " Soldiers of the Temple " or " Knights Templar."

Subsequently the Order of the Temple established branches in different parts of Europe, and assumed shape as a general organization with a definite centre of authority and with subordinate units distributed throughout different countries. The chief officer of the order was styled Grand Master and was elected for life ; his powers though limited were still very great. He was commander-in-chief and director of the forces of the Temple, was vicegerent of the Pope and spiritual head and bishop of the clergy in the order. While the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem lasted, the residence of the Grand Master was at the Holy City, afterwards it was at Acre, and finally at Cyprus. It was always considered necessary for the Grand Master to reside near the Holy Land. Of the other grand officers, the marshall was charged with the execution of military arrangements in battle. The Prior of Jerusalem was Grand Preceptor of the Temple, and Treasurer of the Order. The Draper had charge of the clothing department. The Standard-Bearer carried the Beauseant or military standard to the field. The Turcopilar was commander of a body of light cavalry called Turcopiles. The Guardian of the chapel had charge of the portable chapel which the knights always carried with them into battle.

The Order in each province was presided over by a Grand Prior, representing the Grand Master, while each local unit of organization was styled a preceptory and was governed by an officer called the Prior or Preceptor, who commanded its knights in war and presided in time of peace.

With regard to the ceremonies and forms of admission into the order, these differed from those of other religious associations and resembled those of the Masonic fraternity of to-day by being performed in secret. As to what these ceremonies and forms were we have some knowledge through the confessions extorted from certain of the Knights on the occasion of the suppression of the Order. We learn that the candidate after first being admonished of the strictness of the rules and regulations of the association and promising strict conformity thereto was received into the presence of the Knights—all non-members being excluded—through a door which immediately closed behind him, while before him another door opened into a cemetery, typical of the binding character of the new relation he was to assume, terminable only by death. Next a solemn obligation upon the Holy Gospels was administered to him, binding him to obey the Grand Master, to hold no property, to preserve chastity, never to wrong any man nor to do violence to any person except a Saracen, or in self-defence, and succor the Holy Land with all his might and to defend it against all the attacks of the Infidels. After taking upon himself this obligation the candidate was then invested with the mantle of the Order, the Cross and Coif were delivered to him ; and he was henceforth enrolled amongst the number of Knights Templar.

By the beginning of the fourteenth century, the Templars had preceptories and vast possessions, and wielded immense influence in all the principal countries of Europe. Philip IV., styled "The Fair," of France, jealous of their influence and envious of their wealth, determined to bring about their suppression. He, along with the Pope, Clement V., who was in all things under French influence, concocted a plot against the Order, which was carried out in detail as follows : DeMolay, the Grand Master, at that time resided in Cyprus. He and the principal grand officers of the Order were invited by the French king to Paris on the pretence that grave matters of state were to be discussed there, on account of which the presence and advice of the chief dignitaries of the Temple were needed. On arriving at Paris the Grand Master and his officers were thrown into prison, all the members of the Order throughout France were arrested and incarcerated, their property confiscated, and the revenues of the Order appropriated by the King. To give some color of justice to these proceedings the Knights were charged with idolatry and other crimes as abominable as the accusations were rediculous. After a mock trial fifty-four of the Knights were on the 12th of May, 1310, burned to death ; a fate which after an interval of three years overtook the Grand Master also, and three other of the chief dignitaries of the Temple. A general council of the church was immediately summoned at Vienne, where an edict was issued suppressing the Order and confiscating its revenues. Enforcement of the edict was enjoined upon all the Sovereigns of Europe, who were only too glad to obtain for themselves the rich possessions of the Templars, of whose power and influence they had been exceedingly jealous.

Thus ended the historical order of Knights Templar ; but there exist three modern organizations, each of which claims to be the legitimate successor of the military monks. We shall first deal with the Order of the Temple in France ; on its behalf the statement is made that during his imprisonment DeMolay, in order to perpetuate the fraternity, issued a secret edict in which a certain John Mark Larmenius was named as his successor in the Grand Mastership. Under this ruler those knights who had escaped from the great persecution continued to meet at intervals from 1313 to 1324, in which latter year Larmenius was succeeded by Thomas Theobald, since whom there has been an interrupted succession of Grand Masters until the present time. This French Order is very exclusive, admitting as members men of noble birth only, or who are recommended by some other special qualification. Many Englishmen of note have been enrolled amongst its members including Sir Sydney Smith, the hero of Acre, and the Duke of Sussex, formerly Grand Master of English Freemasons.

The second organization claiming descent from the famous Templars is the Portugese Order known as the Knights of Christ. In 1317 the King of Portugal applied to the Pope for permission to re-establish the Templar order in his dominions, endowing it with the confiscated property of the Portugese Templars. This permission was duly granted, with the proviso, however, that the re-established order should be known, not as Knights Templar, but as Knights of Christ. This order is now one of the most honorable of the Portugese orders of knighthood, only those of noble birth being eligible for membership. Needless to say neither the Portugese nor the French order has any connection with the Masonic system.

We now come to the third aspirant for recognition as the legitimate successor of the mediæval Templars, namely ; the organization already described in the opening paragraphs of this article, an organization, which, though not Masonic, still selects its initiates from amongst Royal Arch Masons. Many accounts are current of the manner in which the modern Templars originated from the mediæval body. Of these the one to which the greatest amount of probability attaches is the following :

On the occasion of the suppression of the Templar body, just as in France a branch of the society continued to meet in secret and perpetuate its existence, so in England the Order, though suppressed, still continued in some places to hold meetings; and to initiate members, though for some time these assemblies were held in secret. The preceptories which still continued their existence were those of Bristol and Hull, and two in London, which are still flourishing and are the parent bodies of the modern Templar Order, and claim an uninterrupted existence since the twelfth century. It is stated that Baldwyn Preceptory, Bristol, possesses documents dated 1780, in which references are made to a long period of previous existence, and in which other preceptories of the order are mentioned as existing at that time. When the first organization of these scattered preceptories into a grand body was arranged, is uncertain. The most probable date is 1780, when a Grand Encampment was held at Carisbrooke, Isle of Wight, and a Grand Master (Sir Thomas Dunckerly), elected, from which time the modern Templar Order should date its existence.

With regard to Scotland many accounts are current; amongst these that some French Templars, at the time of the great persecution, took refuge in the Hebrides; that, on the occasion of the feast of St. John, 1307, the surviving members of the order assembled in the Isle of Mull and re-organized their ancient institution; to secure the perpetuity of their organization they entered the Masonic body, and from that time on confined their membership to Masons of a certain grade; and with Masonry the order has since been associated.

With regard to the claims of these different bodies to be regarded as successors of the Knights of the Temple, we might say that the Portuguese order, having originated some years after the suppression of the Templars, must be regarded as a new and distinct organization having no part nor lot in the glories of the ancient order; while the story told of the origin of the French order and of the document delivered to Larmenius, is essentially improbable; and the different accounts current of the origin of British Templary all bear the earmarks of improbability and should be dismissed as unworthy of credence. And yet we believe that the British order of the Temple may justly claim to be a modern continuation of the ancient order. The grounds for our belief are as follows: The account generally given and accepted of the origin of the Masonic system is that between the years 1717 and 1721 the few surviving members of the mediæval guilds of operative Masons met together and changed their organization into a speculative society, devolping the three ranks of Apprentice, Fellow and Master into degrees of a secret society; that the imagination of certain men fired by this achievement, immediately set to work to devise other degrees and so the entire system was developed. When we take into account the general nature of Masonic ceremonies, that some portions appear utterly meaningless until we learn that they were practised by a secret society of sun-worshipers of over thirty centuries ago, and in their system had a meaning; that some features of the ceremonies bear the marks of the genius of ages separated from one another by many generations; that the ceremonies bear every indication of having developed slowly through many centuries, while a modern originator of degrees would never, in the wildest flights of his imagination, have dreamt of arranging the ceremonial of the degrees, with their apparently meaningless portions included, as we possess them now, considering these facts we may say that the ordinary account of the development of Masonic degrees is as improbable as the old story that Rome was built by Romulus, or that the peculiar institutions of Sparta originated with Lycurgus. If we wish to witness the work of modern degree-mongers we have it at hand in the ceremonial of all other secret societies of the present day. With the exception of those portions of their ritualistic work, which are confessedly copied from the Masonic ritual, there is no portion of their ceremonial, which one could possibly believe to be anything but modern, fabricated in every sense of the word. The greater portion of all Masonic ceremonial, on the other hand, impresses one as being distinctly ancient. The theory that it is a latter day product of excited brains cannot stand for a moment any of the tests of historical criticism.

Secret societies are by no means a modern institution but are as old as civilization itself. The Mysteries, as they were called, exercised in India, in Greece and even in Rome itself, an influence, to which the influence of no secret society of to-day even approximates. Their ceremonies were of such a nature that those of modern societies seem as nothing in comparison. The object of these ancient orders was to inculcate wisdom in their votaries, to reveal to their initiates the mystery of life and the meaning of death, and in the higher grades to initiate their votaries into a system of natural religion, too dangerous to be revealed to the uninitiated vulgar, or even to those of the initiated who had not been tried and tested in the subordinate grades. With the downfall of the Roman Empire, and the organization of the temporal power of the church, the influence of these societies was broken, but broken and disorganized as they were there is evidence that they still lived on, not as developed units, with a regular system of degrees, but as mutilated remnants of a former whole, one grade perpetuating its ritual in one society and another grade in another organization. That these various societies, that existed in Europe during the middle ages affected greatly the Templar Order is highly probable, and in all likelihood gave some ground for the accusations of idolatrous practices which were made against the Knights. After the suppression of the Templar Order, it is likely that its ceremonies found a place in many a society practising secret degrees, and that in fact the Templar organization survived as one degree amidst many similar ones descending from ancient times. This theory is supported by the fact that the earliest Templar bodies practised not only the Templar degree, but also the Rose Croix and the Kadosh, giving up the two latter in fact, only when the Ancient and Accepted Rite became established in England. When the death of Sir Christopher Wren left the operative Masons without a director, and the society was threatened with disruption, it is altogether probable that many members, already connected with the secret societies of the continent, adopted portions at least of the ritual of these societies, and organized a similar system in England. The work was completed in 1721, when the three degrees of Apprentice, Fellow and Master were finally organized, the ceremonies in connection therewith being adaptations from already existing degrees. Latterly all of the more important of the many floating degrees were organized into a regular system in 1758 in the chapter of Clermont, afterwards developing into the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. If this theory be true, the so-called revival of 1717 was in no sense a revival of the ancient Masonry of England, but rather a revival of ancient degrees, or rather of portions of ancient degrees under new names and with certain features altered. It is not improbable that many of the distinguishing features of the mediæval order of military monks have descended to the Templar Order of to-day.

Attached to the modern organization of Knights Templar is an appendant order styled "Knights of St. John, of Jerusalem, Palestine, Rhodes and Malta" and claiming descent from the illustrious order of Knights of Malta, an order which originally was purely religious, and whose object was to attend the sick and needy of the Pilgrims who flocked to the Holy Land, for which purpose they erected an "hospitium" or inn near the church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem; hence the appellation sometimes given them of Knights Hospitalers. Their appellation of Knights of St. John of Jerusalem was given them from the fact that the ancient chapel attached to their hospitium was dedicated to St. John of Jerusalem, a patriarch of Alexandria of the sixth century who was afterwards canonized. In 1118 the order was definitely organized and a Grand Master elected. In 1168, on the occasion of their assisting Amalric, King of Jerusalem, in an expedition against Egypt, their organization was changed from a religious to a military one. In 1291 when the capture of Acre by the Mohammedans ended European dominion in Palestine, the Knights of St. John took refuge first in Cyprus, afterwards in Rhodes, where they exercised sovereign power for 214 years, until in 1523 the island was taken by the Turks.

After the fall of Rhodes the Knights were for some time without a permanent home, sojourning for some years in Crete and afterwards in Italy, until in 1530, the Emperor, Charles V, made them a grant of the Island of Malta, which they accepted as their final habitation, and where they exercised sovereign sway until 1798, when the island surrendered to Napoleon on his return from his Egyptian expedition. In this year the Grand Master abandoned the island, virtually abdicating his office, and closing the history of this famous order, which from its organization in 1118 to its dissolution in 1798 had an existence of nearly 700 years, during which time sixty-nine Grand Masters presided over its destines.

The attempt to connect the Knights of Malta with the modern organization of that name is unsupported by historical evidence. The Knights of St. John, unlike the Templars, did not even have a secret ritual; the ceremony of admitting candidates to the order was a public one, and, during its stay in Malta, the order of the Hospital, as became a Catholic organization, showed a spirit of most decided enmity towards the fraternity of Freemasons. Edicts of Grand Masters are on record directed against the existence of Freemasonry on the island; and on one occasion several knights who were suspected of having participated in Masonic ceremonies were publicly expelled from the Order of Malta. The traditional account which is given of the union of the two orders of the Temple and the Hospital places the scene of that union in Scotland, and the time in the early part of the fourteenth century. The account states that, both orders having considerable possessions in Scotland, the Templars, to preserve both their order and their property, amalgamated with the Hospitalers, and the two from that time on formed in Scotland a united order, but however probable may be the theory that connects the ancient and the modern Templars, it is almost impossible that any connection exists between the latter body and the Knights Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem.

The modern organization of Knights Templar has grand governing bodies established in England, Scotland, Ireland, the different states of the American Union, in Canada and in Australia.

The first Preceptory of Knights Templar established in what is now called Canada is said to have been in Halifax as early as 1782. It was in 1868 that the Provincial Grand Priory of Canada was formed, dependent upon the Grand Conclave of

THE KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

England and Wales. In 1873 Convent-General, already alluded to, was formed, having Canada as a part of its jurisdiction. After an existence of a few years, Convent-General ceased to exist, and, at a meeting of the Provincial Grand Priory at Montreal in 1876, steps were taken to establish a Sovereign Great Priory for Canada. Final independence and recognition, however, were not secured until 1884, since which time the Sovereign Great Priory of Canada has grown and flourished as an independent body.

THE MYSTIC SHRINE.

HIS is the youngest of all the Masonic Orders, but in point of aggressiveness and activity it has scarcely an equal in the higher grades of Masonry. Although organized as late as 1872, it has spread through the entire United States and obtained a fair foothold in Canada as well. The Order of the Mystic Shrine is a fraternity composed of members selected from the highest and most select degrees of Masonry. The candidate for admission must be a Knight Templar, or a thirty-second degree Mason in good standing (i.e., not suspended or demitted). The members of this order meet in bodies called Temples, the officers of which are : I, Illustrious Potentate ; II, Chief Rabban ; III, Assistant Rabban ; IV, High Priest and Prophet ; V, Oriental Guide ; VI, Treasurer ; VII, Recorder ; VIII, First Ceremonial Master ; IX, Second Ceremonial Master or Standard Bearer ; X, Director ; XI, Marshal ; XII, Captain of the Guard ; XIII, Outer Guard. The territorial jurisdiction of subordinate temples extends in all directions to one half the distance, by a direct line, between itself and the nearest Temple, provided, that in no case can it extend beyond the limits of the state, territory or district in which it is located. The governing body of the order is known as the Imperial Council for North America, composed of representatives elected by the subordinate Temples. Each Temple is entitled to at least one representative, who must be a member of the Temple electing him. A Temple is entitled to two representatives when its membership reaches three hundred, three representatives when its membership reaches four hundred, and four representatives when its membership reaches six hundred ; but no Temple is allowed more than four representatives. The Imperial Council is an itinerant body holding its sessions annually at the place selected at a previous meeting.

The first Temple of this order was organized in New York city, September 26th, 1872, and was styled Mecca Temple No. 1. The first Imperial Council met in New York on June 6th, 1876. There are now ninety-one Temples, with an average membership of about 860. The weakest Temple, numerically, is Luxor Temple, St. John, N.B., with a membership of 21; while the strongest as well as the oldest is Mecca Temple, New York city, having a membership of 4,923. The total membership on May 1st, 1903, was 78,182, being a net increase for the year of 10,851. In Canada there are four Temples with a membership of 904, the net increase during the year being 262.

With regard to initiation fees: there are thirty-four Temples charging a fee of $25, one a fee of $27.50, seventeen a fee of $30, four a fee of $35; three charge $40; thirty charge $50, while two Temples charge $100.

The last meeting of the Imperial Council was held on July 13th and 14th, 1904, at Atlantic City, N. J. The next annual meeting will be held during the month of June, 1905, at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

THE ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED SCOTTISH RITE OF FREEMASONRY

ANY, not only outsiders, but Masons as well, are mystified and perplexed by the vast number of Masonic orders and degrees, and few are able to explain the relation existing amongst these and their proper place in the Masonic system. Perhaps this perplexity is even greater amongst Masons themselves than amongst outsiders, as the former find the esoteric teachings of one degree flatly contradicting those of another degree. One degree claiming to be the climax of Masonry and asserting that there is none higher, while a similar claim is made by different other degrees. It is the object of the present paper to present an orderly arrangement of the entire Masonic system and to throw what light it may into dark corners.

A distinction should here be drawn between what might be called universal Masonry and local Masonry. The former is that catholic system which is recognized as Masonry throughout the civilized world. The latter would include those variations of Masonry which are found in but a few localities and bear but a slight resemblance to the more extensive system. The Swedish Rite, for example, of twelve degrees, might be designated as a system of local Masonry.

Of universal Masonry, there are two sharply defined systems. Of these the one with which English speaking people are more familiar is that which is known as the York Rite. Many American writers also call this the American Rite, and the assertion is commonly made that it consists of twelve degrees beginning with that of Entered Apprentice and ending with the degree of Knight Templar. Nothing, however, could be more incorrect. The York Rite consists of three degrees, and of three degrees only, these are:—Entered Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason, to which might be added the official grade of Past Master. These are the only degrees included in or recognized by that system of Masonry known as the York Rite. It is true that some members forming a very small minority of this rite have organized other degrees, but these degrees are not recognized by the body on which they claim to be based and are, in effect, separate societies which voluntarily limit their membership to members of the Masonic fraternity.

The York Rite consists of three degrees which are worked in bodies called lodges. The degrees are known as Entered Apprentice or first degree, Fellow Craft or second degree, and Master Mason or third degree. To these might be added a fourth degree, that of Past Master, which is conferred only upon those brethren who have been actually installed as masters of lodges. The government of each lodge is democratic, the brethren electing each year a master, wardens and officers to whom the government of the lodge is entrusted for the succeeding year. The general government of all the lodges within a certain political division is vested in a body called the Grand Lodge composed of the master and the two wardens of each lodge and of all past masters within the jurisdiction. This body is presided over by a Grand Master elected annually, and has sovereign power over the subordinate lodges within its district, a power limited only by the fact that no Grand Lodge has the right to transgress any of the "Ancient Landmarks" of Masonry.

We might now glance at the other bodies, which though not recognized by the York Rite, yet voluntarily confine their membership to those who have taken the three primitive degrees. Of these bodies the most widely spread is that which is known as the Royal Arch. Royal Arch Masons meet in bodies called chapters in which, in the United States, four degrees are worked, viz. ; Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and the Royal Arch. In Canada the Past Master's degree is omitted, while in England the only degree worked is the Royal Arch, the Mark Master's degree being worked in an independent lodge, having no connection with the Royal Arch. Another important body is that known as Royal and Select Masters, which meets in bodies called councils, in which three degrees are worked, viz.: Royal Master, Select Master and Super Excellent Master. The Royal and Select Masters confine their membership to those who possess the Royal Arch degree. Finally we have that organization, so popular in the United States, the Knights Templar. They meet in bodies called, in the United States, commandaries, but in England and Canada, preceptories. In these three degrees, or more correctly speaking, orders are conferred, viz.: Red Cross Knight; Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. Like the Royal and Select Masters the Templars confine their membership to those who already possess the Royal Arch degree.

Each of the three bodies above mentioned is self-governing and has an administrative organization similar to that of the Masonic body on which they are based. But it must be noticed that they are entirely independent, the one of the other, and all three of the Masonic Grand Lodge. They are not in the slightest degree recognized by Masonic authority, and rank in them, no matter how high, confers no precedence in the lodge. An essential prerequisite to membership in a Royal Arch Chapter is the possession of the three Masonic degrees. But this is a condition voluntarily assumed by Royal Arch Chapters, not imposed upon them. If a Grand Chapter so willed it there seems to be nothing to prevent them making membership in an Oddfellow's or Forester's lodge a prerequisite for their degrees instead of Masonic membership. Or if the Oddfellows or Foresters were voluntarily to make membership in a Masonic lodge a necessary condition on all candidates for admission into their orders, then these bodies would be in the same position that the Royal Arch, the Templars, and the Royal and Select Masters are now. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the York Rite of Freemasonry consists of but three degrees.

In striking contrast to the primitive simplicity of the York Rite, is the gorgeousness and elaborate detail of that other rite of Universal Masonry, the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, known in France as the Rite Ecossais Ancien et Accepte, and in the United States generally as the Ancient and Accepted Rite. In almost every point of comparison between the two rites, striking contrasts are exhibited. The York Rite has but three degrees of comparative simplicity. The Scottish Rite possesses thirty-three degrees, each one having a most elaborate ceremonial. The government of the York Rite is vested in a grand lodge composed of representatives from each subordinate lodge elected annually. The government of the Scottish Rite is vested in the Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree, there being one council for each nation. This council is a self-elected body, its members holding their positions for life. So the government of the Scottish Rite is strictly oligarchical. The thirty-three degrees of the Scottish Rite are arranged in six separate series, there being an assembly or lodge for the working of each series. The first is known as the symbolic series, and contains the same degrees as does the York Rite, though with a different ritual. The first degree is the Entered Apprentice, the second the Fellow Craft, and the third the Master Mason's degree. These are conferred in bodies called symbolic lodges. The second series comprises what are known as the ineffable degrees. These are eleven in number, the first being, Secret Master, fourth degree, and the last, Grand, Elect, Perfect and Sublime Mason, fourteenth degree. The ineffable degrees are conferred in bodies known as Lodges of Perfection. The third series is the ancient historical series, of two degrees viz.: Knight of the East or Sword, fifteenth degree, and Prince of Jerusalem, sixteenth degree: These are conferred in bodies called, Councils of Princes of Jerusalem; the fourth series is the ancient traditional series, also of two degrees which are: Knight of the East and West, seventeenth degree, and Prince of Rose Croix, eighteenth degree, conferred in Sovereign Chapters of Rose Croix. The fifth series comprises all the degrees from the nineteenth degree, Grand Pontiff, to the thirty-second, that of Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret. These are known as the historical, chivalric and philosophical series, and are conferred in bodies called Consistories. The sixth series is official and comprises but one degree, that of Sovereign Grand Inspector General, the thirty-third and last. This is conferred in a body known as the Supreme Council. In Canada both the third and fourth series are conferred in the Rose Croix Chapter.

The government of all these different bodies is entrusted to the Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree. But one Supreme Council is allowed for each nation, with the single exception of the United States, which has two, one for the North, the other for the South. The members of the Supreme Council are of course life members and are limited in number in Canada to thirty-three; in the United States, Northern Jurisdiction to forty-seven, Southern Jurisdiction to twenty-three; in England, Scotland and Ireland each to nine, though honorary membership is also conferred. The officers of the Supreme Council are elected for life.

So in number and arrangement of degrees, the two rites present a striking contrast. The government of the York Rite is democratic, that of the Scottish Rite is oligarchical. But in other respects the contrast is just as striking. The York

Rite is intensely conservative. The Scottish Rite is radical. The York Rite inculcates doctrines of passive morality and emphasizes the duties we owe to our Maker. The Scottish Rite wages an active and unceasing warfare against bigotry and despotism, and descants upon the duties we owe to our fellow-men. The York Rite, in spite of its democratic government, eschews all interference in political matters. The Scottish Rite, in spite of its oligarchical government, makes a determined stand in all countries for the principles of civil and religious liberty. Speaking generally the degrees of the York Rite are biblical, those of the Scottish Rite, philosophical.

Now, as to distribution. The York Rite is firmly established in all English speaking countries and their dependencies, and possibly contains more members than the Scottish Rite. But the latter is much more widely distributed, as it exists in nearly every civilized and in many of the uncivilized countries of the world, and flourishes where the York Rite has never been known. In Latin America it is the one system of Masonry and has jurisdiction over all the degrees from the first to the thirty-third. This is also the case in some other countries. While in some, as in Belgium, the symbolic degrees are self-governing, but still work in the Scottish Rite, and acknowledge the titular supremacy of the Supreme Council.

With regard to English speaking countries; when the Scottish Rite first invaded these they found the York Rite already firmly established. Consequently they wisely determined to start their system at the fourth degree accepting as candidates those who had already taken the degrees of the York Rite. So it is that in English speaking countries we have two systems of Masonry, the York Rite, having jurisdiction over the first three degrees, and the Scottish Rite, over the thirty following. So there is no necessary antagonism between the two rites.

With regard to antiquity and extent of distribution, the claims of the two rites as to the genuine character of their Masonry, are about equal. So that in Canada, for example, we have two supreme Masonic authorities, the Grand Lodge and the Supreme Council, the former dominating one rite of universal Masonry, and the latter the other, the claim of the one to supreme authority in Masonry being fully as well established as that of the other.

It will thus be seen that the degrees of the Scottish Rite do not stand on the same plane as do the degrees of the Royal Arch, the Royal and Select Masters, and the Templars. The latter are voluntary associations of York Rite Masons, not recognized however by the body on which they claim to be based. The Scottish Rite, on the contrary, is a system of universal Masonry complete within itself and including in its system the symbolic degrees, which in the Scottish Rite recognize themselves as but three out of thirty-three grades, all being Masonic. The force of this argument is in no wise vitiated by the fact that, for the peace of Masonry, the Scottish Rite does not in some countries work its symbolic degrees. So we may say that there are thirty-three Masonic degrees, all of these worked in one Masonic Rite, and but three in the other. In addition there are several associations working different degrees which voluntarily limit their membership to Masons of a certain grade.

As has been already stated in a previous article we are warranted in believing that the ancient mysteries of Greece and Egypt never wholly passed away, but that some portions of the ceremonies continued in a more or less modified or adapted form to be practised by secret societies in different European countries ; that to the influence of these societies is owing the elaboration of the three symbolic degrees of Masonry in 1721 ; that during the eighteenth century hundreds of degrees arose, all more or less adapted from ancient ceremonies still in vogue but handed down from time immemorial, so that for the real origin of modern speculative Masonry, we should refer to those organizations of the ancient world known as the mysteries. The idea underlying the formation of the Scottish Rite system was merely to re-organize the ancient ceremonies practised in secret societies throughout Europe, and which to-day constitute the ancient degrees of Masonry, together with those degrees of later origin, but which have historical or practical significance, in a regularly organized and graded system, resembling those systems from which the most ancient portion of the ceremonies had sprung, but eliminating the hundreds of degrees of mushroom growth which had subsequently developed. The Scottish Rite system, then, is intended to include all the degrees in Masonry that are really significant, either on account of great antiquity, or historical interest, or from their practical importance as supplying the place of missing links in the more ancient system. One degree, however, which is both of great antiquity and of historical interest has been omitted from this system, and that is the degree of Knight Templar. Rather than say that the Rose Croix and Kadosh degrees should be worked in a Knight Templar preceptory, it is surely more fitting to say that the Templar degree should find a place in the comprehensive system of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. Since the number of degrees cannot be increased, it could, at least in a modified form, find a place as the first section of the Kadosh degree, an idea which seems to have been actually contemplated by the chiefs of the Scottish Rite when they introduced their system into England.

The first organization of the Scottish Rite degrees into a regular system was made in France in 1754, when twenty-five already existing degrees were definitely arranged in order and worked in the Chapter of Clermont, named after the then Masonic Grand Master of France, Louis of Bourbon, Prince of Clermont. This system was first called the Rite of Perfection. The twenty-fifth and highest degree was that of Prince of the Royal Secret, which now ranks as the thirty-second. It is said that in 1760, Frederick the Great of Prussia became the official head of the Rite with the title of Grand Commander of the Princes of the Royal Secret. Seven additional degrees were then added, bringing the number up to thirty-two, and provision was made for the establishment of an official degree for the government of the Rite in each nation. In 1761 the Rite was introduced in the West Indies under the auspices of a Grand Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret meeting in Paris. In 1783 a lodge of Perfection was established in Charleston. In 1788 a council of Princes of Jerusalem was instituted in the same city, and in 1801 the first Supreme Council of the Rite was organized, also in Charleston. This Supreme Council organized Supreme Councils for Ireland, Mexico and Colon, and also one for the Northern jurisdiction of the United States. This latter Council established the Supreme Council of England and Wales, which in turn established the Supreme Council of Canada. As to the origin of the different degrees nothing definite can be stated. Their organization into a regular system was accomplished in France, and the organization of Supreme Councils for the government of the Rite originated in the United States.

A candidate for the Scottish Rite degrees must be a Master Mason of at least six months' standing. After receiving the fourteenth degree he may apply to a Rose Croix Chapter for admission to its degrees ; after receiving the eighteenth degree he may apply to a Consistory for the degrees from the nineteenth to the thirtieth inclusive. Separate applications must be made for the thirty-first and the thirty-second degrees respectively. The thirty-third is conferred only by the Supreme Council upon thirty-second degree Masons whom it may honor with this most coveted grade in Masonry. There is a time limitation of six months between the several stages, except that one year must elapse between the dates of receiving the thirtieth and thirty-first degrees and also between the thirty-first and the thirty-second.

The Royal Order of Scotland

OSSIBLY the most exclusive, certainly one of the most coveted, of the Masonic orders is that exceedingly quaint and decidedly ancient organization known as the Royal Order of Scotland.

The popular tradition connected with the Order is that it originated on the field of Bannockburn in 1314, when King Robert the Bruce, to recompense the valor of certain Templars who had contributed materially to the English defeat, formed a new order in Masonry, of which he and his successors should be hereditary Grand Masters, and whose membership should be drawn from those who held both the Master Mason's and the Royal Arch degrees. This story, of course, is impossible of verification, but, taking authentic sources of information only, the Order is ancient enough. The earliest notice that we possess of the degrees has reference to the year 1743, and, curiously enough, refers to the English rather than the Scottish working of the degrees. Since then, however, the Order has been extensively, though exclusively, cultivated, and is now established in many countries.

The Royal Order of Scotland comprises two degrees; the first, known as that of Heredom of Kilwinning, is worked in a body called a Chapter; the second, called The Rosy Cross, is worked in a Grand or Provincial Grand Lodge, to which the Chapters are subordinate.

The governing body of the Order is known as the Grand Lodge, and is merely the Scottish branch of the Order, which has supremacy over the bodies in other countries. The Grand Master is the Sovereign of Scotland (i.e., the King of Great Britain), when that monarch is a member of the Order. When he is not a member, the position remains vacant. Under the Grand Master the chief ruler of the Order is the Deputy Grand Master, or Governor; the Chair of State, however, is always reserved for the Scottish Sovereign. When he is not present the Chair remains vacant. Bodies of the Order are chartered in other countries by the Grand Lodge in Scotland, and are styled Provincial Grand Lodges, their rulers being known as Provincial Grand Masters. The membership, of course, is very limited ; in the United States, for example, the limit is a hundred and fifty members, with a possible margin of twenty-five, divided equally between the northern and the southern Masonic jurisdictions of that country. In Canada there is no fixed limit, but the practical rule is followed of admitting no more than two new members in each year. In the jurisdiction of Ontario and Quebec the membership at present stands at forty.

The Canadian branch of the Royal Order comprises two Provincial Grand Lodges. The one known as the Provincial Grand Lodge of Ontario and Quebec has its domicile in the city of Hamilton, meeting four times a year on the fourth day of January, April, July and October ; the other, known as the Provincial Grand Lodge of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, has its domicile in St. John, N.B., meeting on the first Wednesday of February, May, August and November.

In Canada applications for membership are received only from Royal Arch Masons who have attained the Thirty-Second degree in the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite. The fee is sixty dollars. Though not so widely celebrated the Order is almost as exclusive as is the Supreme Council of the Thirty-Third degree. Many of the chief dignitaries in Masonry have knocked in vain at its portals ; and even Past Grand Masters regard admission into its ranks as an exceedingly high honor. Except the Thirty-Third degree, no grade in Masonry is more highly regarded than the Royal Order of Scotland.
